Somehow, more effectively than any our country in-Europe, Great Britain as maintained something like a normal industrial organization and industrial producing capacity during the war. For-

Not only do these women like their ew independence, but they realize that after the war they will need to retain because so many of them will be without husbands, or fathers, or brothers to do the producing for them. It has become a recognized necessity that women who are thus left on their own resources must have the privilege of -arning independent incomes. How shall the community differentiate between those who really need to continue in the c

Judgment. Whatever the Government's investigators of industrial unrest may think. Miss Macarthur is concerned about the possibility that there may develop an industrial antagonism between the serve of the concerned to the conce

velop an industrial antagonism between the sexes after the war and she is determined that it shall be prevented.

"There will be custending and conflicting interests after the war," said Miss Macarthur recently, "but these interests will not find women ranged on one side and men on the other. There must be no sex war in industry after the war."

Point Out Great Danger.

Point Gut Great Danger.

"The great danger is that women may allow themselves to be used to depress the standard of wages. Suitability should be the determining factor and not cheapness; women will have to recognize the great danger of undercutting men in the labor market."

This is the sort of advice Miss Macarthur has been giving the women workers for a long time past. She is anxious that women on the one side should be willing to affiliate with the labor organizations, and on the other that the labor organizations should freely and frankly admit women to membership. Organization, in her view. can be made to avert the danger of a serious controversy.

The standing joint committee of In-dustrial Women's Organizations has drawn up a programme which contem-plates calling together the employers London, Aug. 11.—Is there a possibility of an economic war between the sense after the conclusion of Europe's peace? Will there be a struggle between women trying to retain the positions they have held during the war and men trying to return to jobs they left to salist?

Judging by the serious attention constantly given, these questions are not to be regarded as foolish. Not long ago a serious minded London newspaper asserted that a conspiracy had been organized against the men in the trenches; that the extension of suffrage to the women was part of this conspiracy; that the women thus enfranchised were expected to join with the political forces that have given them the ballot, and that the combination would be strong enough to dominate the country. This rembination would force upon the country relies and the delegated representatives of the trade unionists to consider on what the deligated representatives of the trade unionists to consider on what the sality in the future. It is said that while considerable success has attended the effort to organize women munition workers a large proportion of them are still absolutely unorganized. That these their positions and may even be willing to work at lower wages than the organized against the men in the trenches; that the extension of suffrage to the women was part of this conspiracy; that the considerable success has attended the effort to organize women munition workers a large proportion of them are still absolutely unorganized. That these their positions and may even be willing to work at lower wages than the organized against the men in the trenches; that the extension of suffrage to the women will attempt to keep their positions and may even be willing to work at lower wages than the organized women will attempt to keep their positions and may even be willing to work at lower wages than the organized women will attempt to keep their positions and may even be willing to work at lower wages than the organized women will attempt to keep their positions and may eve

the affiliation of women to a consider-able extent on their belief that when plan of payment on the unit of produc-tion basis; that is, putting work more plan of payment on the unit of production basis; that is, putting work more and more on the piece basis.

The labor unions have generally been opposed to this, with the result that the biandard of producing capacity has been lowered continually in order that the poorest journeyman in a particular trade might meet the minimum requirement. Until the war compelled a thorough survey of everything bearing on industrial efficiency it was not realized how greatly the producing capacity of the mass had suffered by this establishment of so low a producing minimum.

Now it is known that in many trades with comparatively short experience. the regard such sowing of suspicion as profoundly mischievous. Yet there is the suspicion and it accounts in part for the "labor unrest" throughout the country.

with comparatively short experience proved themselves quite as good pro-ducers as the men, and frequently touch better.

The real problem of industrial reconplaces temporarily assigned to them in the industrial structure. On the other chand the commission found the unrest enough to keep them all at work and caused chiefly by high prices and the markets enough to absorb all their

the front?

It is apparent that the Government, in the first problem is going to be so serious as some other people resard it. Lloyd George is one of those economists who do not believe there is much danger of getting too big a producing spacity in the country, provided the and often is locked up. But however in a corresponding ratio.

This conception is more widely enter-tained than it ever was before, but it is not by any means entertained by all the husband.

Almost a decade ago an effort was made to obtain legislation providing making the readjustment after the war.

It is apparent that the Government, then the Government, in the Government of the problems separation. Judicial separation, does in the new issued on account of cruelty, desertion, drunkenness and many other offences, but these do not responsible the problem is going to be constitute divorce. Commonly the husband is required to pay mainfunance of the may break off relations with Germany, but the chances are that Spain will continue to suffer the consequences of the war without participating in it and that she will not benefit in any way, even indirectly, by the doubtful honor of having her king appointed a mediator between the belligerent Powers. In other terms, the outlook in Spain is nothing but a blank.

No review of conditions in Spain, however incomplete, can be concluded works and projects of church reform.

Ministry of Reconstruction.

To the adjustment of these factors the new Ministry of Reconstruction is going very largely to devote itself. In Parliament there has been the usual grumbling about the creation of another governmental department headed by a Minister, and it has been charged that the Jovernment is developing into a regular Pruestan bureaucracy. But despite criticism of this kind, there is a general realization that it is necessary to consider these problems and prepare solution for them in advance of demobilization.

Ferhaps no woman in England stands higher as an authority on the industrial problems of her sex or wields a larger in private life is Mrs. William C. Andersen, whose husband is a Labor member of Parliament for Sheffield and chairman of the executive computation of the cases fear that this measure would make it too easy. But the people who have investigated do not. They describe fearfully immoral conditions widely existent because of the present difficulties of getting divorce. Immorality, illiegitimacy disease and a fearful number of cases of bigamy are enumerated. Husband and wife legally bound to each other yet legally separated, forced to lives of cellbacy, lose all moral standards. The fact that they are commonly poor makes the results yet worse. It is a question largely concerning the poorer people, for at best it costs more than the poorer people, for at best it costs more than the poorer people, for at best it costs more than the poorer people, for at best it one and the poorer people.

Lisson. Aug. 6.—German submarine warfare in the Mediterranean has been a source of enormous profit to the fishermen of Spain and has offered a means of making large sums of money without the expenditure of great effort. This in a way explains why a large element is pro-German, made so by riches reaped from the seas and also through receiving German money direct in an effort to complicate an already complex political situation.

In addition to earning money for "help" the proceeds of wreckage from

The majority of ships which have been sunk by submarines in the Mediterranean have been attacked along the Spanish terranean have been attacked along the Spanish coast, often in Spanish ter-ritorial waters and within sight of the coast, and no sooner a ship goes down or is abandoned in sinking condition by its crew than Spanish fishermen rush to the spot like sharks. As a result the and villages are pro-German.

The mistaken impression prevails aroughout Spain that France and Portugal are secretly at work to bring about a revolution and change the me archy into a republic. The Germans did their level best to confirm this im-ing an army of new workers, equipping them with just as much skill as possible as possible from the new conditions. Hundreds of thousands of women have learned to do work that men formerly did and were supposed to have the exclusive capacity to do.

Attitude of Women.

Attitude of Women.

Attitude of women like their revisits of the royal commission which has lately been investigating the divorce troblem. This, moreover, is only a beginning.
